Read Books. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Paperback. 30 pages. Dimensions: 8.5in. x 5.5in. x 0.1in.an excerpt from the beginning of the story: Among the towns of xml: namespace prefix st1 ns urn: schemas-microsoft-com: office: smarttags Jutland, Viborg justly holds a high place. It is the seat of a bishopric; it has a handsome but almost entirely new cathedral, a charming garden, a lake of great beauty, and many storks. Near it is Hald, accounted one of the prettiest things in Denmark, and hard by is Finderup, where Marsk Stig murdered King Erik Glipping on St. Cecilians Day, in the year 1286. Fifty-six blows of square-headed iron maces were traced on Eriks skull when his tomb was opened in the seventeenth century. But I am not writing a guide-book. xml: namespace prefix o ns urn: schemas-microsoft-com: office: office There are good hotels in ViborgPreislers and the Phnix are all that can be desired. But my cousin whose experiences I have to tell you now, went to the Golden Lion the first time that he visited Viborg. He has not been there since, and the following pages will perhaps explain the reason of his abstention. The Golden Lion is one of the very few houses in the town that were not destroyed in the great fire of 1726, which practically demolished the cathe!-- Page 46 --dral, the Sognekirke, the Raadhuus, and so much else that was old and interesting. It is a great red-brick housethat is, the front is of brick, with corbie steps on the gables and a text over the door, but the courtyard into which the omnibus drives is of black and white wood and plaster. The sun was declining in the heavens when my cousin walked up to the door, and the light smote full upon the imposing...
