When something has been determined concerning the relative needs of the soil for these elements of fertility, fertilizers with the proper composition for obtaining maximum crops upon the soil can be more intelligently selected. Money is not wasted in buying too largely of a fertilizer constituent not especially needed. One-half to one acre of ground is laid off in ten long, narrow plots. If the land is rolling, these plots must run up and down the declivity. Fertilizers are applied to each plot according to the following scheme, and then a single kind of crop is planted on all of the plots. This plan tests the actual increase in weight made by the crop when nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash are each applied separately, when they are applied in the three possible combinations of two elements, and finally when all three are applied together. There are also three check plots, where no fertilizer is applied. Plot i Check. No Fertilizer Plot 2 Sodium Nitrate Plot 3 Superphosphate Plot 4 Potassium Chlorid Plot s Check.
