Not illustrated. 1913 Excerpt: .by the frost and cold weather, (b) The ice pressure from the reservoir may be very large, eltho it was impossible to estimate it with any degree of accuracy. It was thot that an earth fill dam, having more elasticity than either the rook fill or the masonry, would be better able to withstand this pressure than either of the other types, (c) Careful preliminary estimates showed the earth fill type of structure to be more economical than the others. The concrete corewall was decided upon for two reasons, (a) to make an absolutely water tight connection between the earth fill and the foundation, and () to prevent the possibility of badgers, and other burrowing animals, of which there are a great many in the neighborhood, from ever endangering the structure by burrowing thru it. The upstream slope protection, paving and berm, was made very heavy to protect the embankment against the action of waves and ice, which may be very severe as high winds are frequent. Two locations for the dam were considered, the accepted location about 500 below the mouth of the Harrows of Strawberry River, and a point about 1000 further down the river. A dam at this lower site would be more protected from wave action, and the site was abandoned only when it was finally decided to build an earth fill structure, ae there was no suitable material within a reasonable distance. As shown by the area and capacity curves,...
