Excerpt: .amidst the jealous and envious looks of my superior officers because she, herself, individually wished to and because she liked or maybe loved me. Whereupon I was going to second the motion and say, Ditto, I love you, Eileen, and all that sort of bunk and close the contract. I pictured myself enfolding her in my willing arms and making solemn vows such as I would stand on my ear for her, etc.; all of this, of course, being contingent upon her responding in the way I fully expected. Smiling--her teeth reflected glory in the moonlight--she demurely asked me, Why, don t you know? That would have been all right ordinarily, but it had a ringing inflection I failed to comprehend, and being a man of words instead of action, I said, No, I don t know. Well, she went on rather surprised at...
