Judge at m. ri prius was not a mere subordinate officer of the Supreme Court, entrusted only with power to ascertain the truth of allegations put in issue by the parties litigant. For if he were so, he must be excluded from the exercise of discretion in every conceivable case. But he denied that the inquiry as to the sex of the Chevalier DEon was indecent. Would a court ever think of dismissing a case because it became necessary to ascertain whether one of the parties was of the male or female sex But the principle in the case cited was, that, inasmuch as no one had a right to lay a wager as to the sex of another; that no judgment ought to be rendered on a verdict in such a case, and that being clear, no evidence ought to be received for the purpose of procuring such a verdict. If in slander, it is suggested on the trial that the words are not actionable---suppose it were for calling the plaintiff a fool--the Judge would not only nonsuit the plaintiff, but refuse to hear evidence. has something more to do then, than merely to ascertain the truth of certain allegations set up gentlemen have mistaken the road, and therefore find themselves now bewildered in the ceremony on one side, and denied on the other. And he will decide whether testimony offered can, or cannot, result ultimately in a judgment; and entertain or dismiss the...
