What does that mean? The Britannica Online Encyclopedia serves us with the following definition: A market is a means by which the exchange of goods and services takes place as a result of buyers and sellers being in contact with one another, either directly or through mediating agents or institutions. 1. What they call means could also be named as a social arrangement. Analogously to the physical location of a street market every other form of market is a man-made institution in order to organize trade. Thereby it is in addition to the right of own property probably the most salient feature of every capitalist system. But as long as markets are not natural but social constructs, they and the way they are shaped...
