A case happened in a city in New York State in which a gentleman went to a dentist to have a tooth extracted, and the dentist used a local anaesthetic. He did not employ hypnotism at all; but the anaesthetic, being entirely new to the patient, he got thinking over the matter afterward, and imagined that hypnotism had been used on him unconsciously as he was ignorant of any anaesthetic other than chloroform and ether, and as no inhaler was employed he naturally inferred that he had been hypnotized, as he had read a number of sensational articles in which people had been hypnotized unconsciously (one in particular in which it was represented that a dentist had hypnotized a young lady one time and caused her to elope with him). After he had the tooth pulled, every day at...
